

August 19, 2013 - A little over 1 week after his surgery, Jedi is touching down on three legs, with long recovery/healing pauses, in between. Praying for a touchdown on the femur injured legs, in the days to come. Immediately after surgery, he was pushing through the pain to look for his sister Yoda, but I believe he is coming to a resolve. We all miss her. She was the life of the party!

See pictures of Jedi attached. The cloth around his waist is a homemade hoist that I use to pull him up if he gets in trouble and can't get up or if he is in a lot of pain. Although, I am using it less in the last couple of days, more so to guide him when he gets stubborn about what direction he thinks we should be going in. As you can see, he is a big boy! Thereby, Jedi/AKA Bidy Boy (his nickname.)

I can never thank you enough for helping to save him.